Ir it is true, as the Rangoon Gazette is inclined to believe, that the King of BURMAN instigated or was accessary to the attack on imprisonment. From the day of the promulthe Burmo-Chinese Expedition, it will considerably complicate matters. The British Government waits to hear what Mr. WADE has to communicate before taking action in the matter. Perhaps it has been resolved to despatch two English officials to Momein partly on this account, since it is probable they may be able to gain some information there that may throw light upon the matter, and show how far His Majesty of Burman has really been involved in the outrage. From his antecedents it is bere that would emble us to compel, by canciextremely probable that the King was opposed to the project of opening up a trade route from the properly constituted authorities. Friends of the artist here and in France have been for some little time aware that indisposition had gradually assumed the shape of serious illnes, and at the seion of our old parent stock; but we did not ripe age of seventy-nine death cannot be ac- wish to see our trade diminished, our manucounted either premature or even unexpected factures paralysed by our own carelessness But Corot's powers, despite his years, bad been in not watching the signs of the times, by our own folly in not giving heed to the death is a positive and serious loss to the contemporary art of France. Following hird upon that of Millet, it leaves a gap in the front from the institutions of the land which she rank of Franck landwape painters not readily herself loved to call "the old country," as, on the to be filled up; for these men held in some other hand, the intelligent visitor to the United sense a representative place in their art, and States saw on all sides much that we too had gave through their work a masterly expression need to learn; and the more we untually knew to a view of nature that is deeply obstructeristic of each other, the more should we see that our of French modes of thought. Neither Millet interests were one, the more would the mother neighbors of landscape—the shape and colour and importance, by the development of nature's and importance, by the development of nature's of flowers, the precise forms of trees, or the gifts, and by the cultivation of the arts of bright confusion of tint to be gained by a peace and the more would the daughter delight oursful record of the separate elements of the to realise the close relationship which should scene. To their ideal all these things were only important in so far as they assisted the expres- apart, and yet so closely allied. (Loud apsion of a distinct sentiment. The fact that in both cases the sentiment sought for in nature has been a sentiment of melancholy is probably due in part to national tendencies of thought in part to technical considerations. If the facts of landscape are to be brought into the perfect harmony needed for the expression of a single emotion, it is easier for the paintar to select mounts when the presence of cloud or atorm aubdues variety of colour by the powerful and natural influence of tone. In the laudscape of Millet and Corot the sense of melancholy i nearly always expressed; but there is this dis tinction, that with the former the sudness is savage and sometimes grand, while with Corot it is tender and pathetic. The painter was a pupil of Michallon and of Victor Bertin. His first exhibited works, two landscapes in the Salon for the year 1827, decisively testified to the direction of his ganing, and in 1833 his gifts were officially recognized by a medal of the second class. Higher honours followed in 1848 and 1855; but there has not been need of any official stamp to set Corot for some time past in the very front rank of French urtists. And in England, as well as in France. the tender beauty of his landscapes has been fully appreciated. The rooms of the Society of French Artists in Bond street have afforded the student as ample material for judging of the painter's merits as his own countrymen can enjoy, and it is satisfactory to be able to add that the opportunities have not been neglected. Upon the qualities of Corot's refined and delicate art very much might be enid The success with which he arrested effects of light and cloud that must have ecosped any coarser perception or less skilful touch renders his work remarkable even in a purely technical sense. No one had over so faithfully interpreted the silver tones of sunlight blanched to perfect whiteness by light fleecy clouds, or had caught the spirit of tender undness that dwells in the grey tones of a strengthens and the lights change, and his description might almost be taken as a commentary upon the beauties of his ownart. Certainly these sentences upon the benuties of twilight closely indicate the kind of effect for which the painter strove in his work. After following the different changes of the sun, and tracking it to the close of the day, he continues:-"The sun has disappeared There only remains in the softened sky a vaporone tint of pale citron. . . . The meadows lose their colour; the trees form themselves turf."-Pall Mall Gazette.

The total wheat production in the United States and territories in 1860 was 173,104,924 bushels, and in 1870, 287,745,626 bushels; while the total production of Indian corn or maize the staple food of the people, was, 1860, no less than 838,792,742 bushels and in 1870, a bad harvest, 760,944,54 bushels. From the year 1850 to 1860 the population of these States increased more than 30 per cent, but the production of wheat increased in a far larger ratio. They had therefore a large surplus available for export. Speaking of Chicago, he said it was perhaps the most interesting city he visited in his various trips to the American continent. Its progress had been marvellous. So recently as 1830 it was a boundary-fort or station, with a village consisting of 14 or 15 log huts, and about 60 inhabitants, who were mostly French, allied with the Pottawattemys tribe of Indians. A CURIOUS SNAKE FIGHT. The Sauta Rosa Democrat tells of a carlous enake fight: "Last August, as Mr. Woodbridge, who lives just above Cloverdale, was going to hie work in the early morning, he saw a strange sight, something which he could not at first define-whirling; writhing and turning on the ground. On a nearer approach what was his astonishment to discover two immense rattleanakes engaged in deadly strife. They were wrapped around each other from tail to within eix or eight inches of the head, and never for a moment did they take their eyes off each other. Now and then they would slowly unwind to within one or two coils of the tail, when with an instantaneous, movement they would again become involved to the neck, and with jaws distended and fangs exposed, one would strike at the other, his antagonist invariably dodging the blow, when in turn he would strike in the same manner and in turn would be foiled. After repeating their manmuvres for a time they would lie panting in each other's coils, LOONS. and then slowly and cautiously unwind only to repeat the involvement and striking again. imperial quarto. ENGLISH AND CHINESE DICTIONARY, WITH THE PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION. An Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, published at the Daily Press Office, Hongkong.

IOR comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objectain machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in estenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given, the accents being carefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby effecting a vast vast margins and vacant spaces which have heretofore characterized Chinese publications. A QUESTION. "The fool bath said in his heart there is no God." What will you give if you take away-My faith in the God whom I trust to-day-If to religion I bid farewell, What can you give me (Oh | quickly tell)?-For the blessed peace that purvades my life, That soothes its sorrows, and calms its strife: That makes all duties, though hard, soom sweet And rough paths smooth to my weary feet; That teaches me to be kind and just. And worthy always of love and trust; That wokens bright hopes of joys unseen, Brings peace in grief, and makes joy screne; That can benish terror when Death draws nigh-(Sawest then ever a Christian dis-Praising his God with his latest breath, And saying, "Where is the sting of death ?")-What shall I have if I yield all this-What can you give me of ental bliss-That shall cheer my spirit in wee or strife; Bless all the sorrows and joys of life;

MARION BERNSTEIN. FAITHFUL AMONG THE FAITHLESS. Once in a while in this world to strange, To lighten our sad regreta. We may find a heart that is true through change,-A heart that never forgets:

And give, when I draw my latest breath,

A happy hope 'mid the pange of death ?.

But rare as a rose in December, As a bird in an arctic clime, is a heart that can ever remember, Through sorrow, and change, and time.

Once in a while we find a love That will last through life and death, That will follow the soul above, Not passing away with the breath; But rarer far, and stranger Than a spring in the desert sand, Is a love that will last, with toil, and danger, And strife on every hand.

Once in a while we find a friend That will cling through good and ill. Whose friendship follows us e'en to the end, Be it up or adown the hill: But the heart so true, and the love so tender, And friendship's falthful amile. Whether we dwell in sadness or splendonr, - We find but "Once in a while."

It should by this time be accepted as an established fact that there are more pious and morality-loving people in England than in any other country in the world, for the God-fearing souls who live in our midst are constantly assuring us that this is so. It appeared that their modus operandi had been to lend out sums of ten or twenty pounds, always taking care to get an absolute bill of sale upon furniture worth ten or twelve times the amount. If they were paid they got back their money with something like a hundred and twenty per cent. If they vere not paid, they soized the furniture, and sold it at mock auctions of their own for a mere fraction of its value, buying it in themselves. To lend at cent. per cent. upon tangible and good security must be a sufficiently lucrative business, although, no doubt, the small loan-office proprietor heavily mulcted for advertisements. Indeed, from this particular point of view, there is almost something to be said in extenuation of their charges. The fact is that the man who lends out his money at 80 per cent. without inquiry or security, simply makes his clients insure one another. Some of them never pay him at all; others pay him a few shillings in the pound; others offer him back his prin-cipal with 5 per cent.; and when allowance has been made for all these drawbacks his net profits are by no means as exorbitant as might be at first supposed. > MICHAEL ANGELO. An interesting discovery has been made the Academy says, at Pisa. The noble family of Pesciolini possessed at Pisa one of the handsomest palaces in the city. It contained some interesting works of art, smoon others a statue of St. John given to Donatello. This palace, long uninhabited and neglected, was sold to the Count Rosselmini, when the statues were submitted to the judgment of the sculptor Signor Salvini. He pronounced the course of an Eastern tour, asked his business under the name of Diprose, were the supposed Donatello to be a statue by Arab attendant if he was quite sure she al-Michael Angelo, and in all probability that St. | ways got her allowance.- "Oh, yes," he re-John which, as Vasari relates, was sculptured plied; "my countrymen often steal from one by the great master for the Duke of Urbino another, and rob their friends' horses, but I Catherine of France. SAVINGS FOR ALL PEOPLE. No one denies that it is wise to make provision for old age: but we are not at all agreed as to the kind of provision it is best Drap Brocada Do. to lay io. Certainly we shall want a little sorry sight; yes, save money by, all means. But save health also; save knowledge; save the recollection of good and noble deeds, innocent pleasures, and pure thoughts; save Varvaraus, Black, friends, save love. This is wealth which time cannot diminish, nor death take away.
